

Every time a man lifts his head, a wink out of the chain of life, and three lengths out of the Billings.

—Why is a doctor like a meadow mole? Because you can track him by the holes he makes in the ground.

—Speaking of apples, it is remarkable that the first apple in Paradise should have turned out the first pair!

—It is hard to sever old ties as the boy said who was trying to make stoves out of old railroad sleepers.

—There is much food for reflection in the following questions and answers: "Who lifts a woman when she is down?" "Why another woman?" "Who keeps her down?" "Why, another woman."

—When Sheridan kept a school he had in one of his classes a boy who always read passages for patriarchy. "Stop," exclaimed the wag of a teacher, "you should not make game of the patriarchy."

—I have a good appetite, said a gipsy fellow, who was an eminent performer on the tumbler, to a friend. "I hope," said the friend, "too poor man has found it, for it would ruin him in a week."

—A little four-year old was turning somersaults a few days since, and his mother cautioned him to desist, telling him he would break his neck. "No I shan't, Mamma, God puts 'em on me," was the little hopeful's assuring reply.

—A tradesman who had failed in the city of Bangor, wrote on his front door: "Payment suspended for thirty days." A neighbor reading this said: "You have not dated the notice." "No," said he, "I do not intend to do so; it would run out if it did."

—A friend of ours, who has had some experience, says that if you go to call on a young lady, and she crochets diligently all the evening, and only says "Yes" and "No," you can go away about nine or a quarter past, without breaking any of the rules of etiquette.

—The Methodist Recorder asks the ladies of adult years who cling to the "ie" in their names, how it would look to put a verse of Scripture in modern style, thus: "Now a certain man was sick named Lazarus, of Bethanien, the town of Mullie and her sister Mattie."

—There is a little railroad at Bayou Sara, La., that runs to Woodville on a very uncertain schedule. A stranger came in the other day and inquired how often that steam car made trips to the country. "Tri-weekly," was the reply. "What do you mean by tri-weekly?" "It goes up one week and tries to come down the next."

—The Chicago Post, in commenting on the performance in that city, of Handel's "Messiah," says: "Handel would have been pleased with such a house; but if Handel had seen men and women rise and move out of the hall while 'Behold, I will tell you a mystery' was being sung, Handel would have seized a base drum and thrown it at the ill-bred rustics who could be guilty of such an outrage on good music and good taste."

—Some young men in Bangor, Me., who heard marvelous stories of the number of pickled caught thereabout through the ice, started out the other day to do a little fishing themselves, told an inquisitive country cousin whom they met on the way, that they had not included an ax in their otherwise complete outfit because there "were lots of people fishing there last winter, and they could fish through last year's holes."

—"Man wants little here below, nor wants that little long," is a libel; man wants everything he can see, or hear, or smell, and never is willing to let go of his grab.

—Whenever you find a man that is thoroughly satisfied with what he has got you will find either an idiot, or one who has tried hard to get some more and couldn't get it. The older a man grows the more wantful he becomes; as his hold on life slackens, his pinch on a dollar grows grippier. —Josh Billings.

—The Misses Buxton, Lathrop, Chase, Ward and Butler of the Zenana Mission, have arrived in Calcutta in good health and spirits.

—The friends of Charles Fechter in Boston, have arranged a complimentary benefit to him on Saturday evening next, at the Globe theatre, on which occasion he will take leave of Boston for the present. Among those who honor him with their names are Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, James T. Fields, George S. Hillard and Professor Agassiz. On leaving Boston Mr. Fechter and Miss Lathrop will open a new theatre in Pittsburgh, it is said.

—There is a negro debating society in Beaufort, Georgia, the last meeting of which was devoted to a discussion of whether education or money is the most beneficial to the community. The advocates of the education side of the question won the prize—$20 in gold. At the next meeting they will decide whether it is to the interest of the laborer to work for wages or a part of the crop.

—The farmers of Iowa have formed a secret association for mutual advantage, under the title of "The Patrons of Husbandry." Its operations will extend as to the price of produce, and will have an important bearing upon the grain market. So rapidly are members coming in that by Spring they will number, it is said, at least 12,000.

—The wealthy men of New York believe in life insurance. Twenty-two of them are insured for various sums from $100,000 to $500,000, showing an aggregate amount of $3,350,000, or an average of over $157,000. Cyrus W. Field has his insured for nearly a quarter of a million. Daniel Drew has life insured for several hundred thousand dollars. Horace Greeley has an insurance of about $25,000 on his life. Mr. James Brown, head of the banking house of Brown Brothers, is insured on his life for $100,000.

—DEATH FROM CHOLERA.—Doctor Hughes Bennett stated at the last meeting of the British Association that "he knew of one very sad case that happened in Edinburgh. A young and beautiful lady daughter of a barrister, in perfect health, went to a dentist's house one morning and had a tooth extracted. Five minutes afterwards she was dead. That was only one of many similar cases that had occurred but had never been published."

Farmer's Column.

SAVING MANURE.

This is a question on which volumes have been spoken and libraries written, but still, farmers, by their disregard, show their indifference to it. It is a topic on which some men seem to need literally line upon line, precept upon precept, and very thorough, striking examples before they will become practically convinced. Why do not farmers take better care of the manure? If one of them, on going out to his granary in the morning, should find a leak through which his wheat was running to waste, he would not stop until the leak was stayed. Yet that same man doubtless has a worse leak from his manure pile that he makes no effort to prevent. True it may not leak as fast as the grain bin did, yet the waste may be greater, because, instead of a single night, the waste is going on the year round by washings and evaporation—a leak that would fill his granary to bursting. Manure is a bank from the agriculturist can draw the greenbacks, with percentage on his time and pay for his labor.

Let every farmer who reads this consider the condition of his manure pile. Every thrifty, energetic farmer who is thoroughly alive to his best interests and the requirements of his land, will be endeavoring to save all his fertilizing materials, and add them to his manure pile. Any one, however careless or negligent can apply it to the land. But the test of a good farmer is as much or more in the making and saving manure, as in applying to the soil.

How to MAKE HENS LAY.—People would better understand this matter, says the Country Gentleman. If they considered for a moment a hen to be, as she is, a small steam engine, with an egg laying attachment, and thus there must be a constant good supply of good feed and pure water to keep the engine and its attachment up to its work. In addition to keeping before hens, who have complete liberty, a constant supply of pure water summer and winter, I have found that during the cool and cold weather in fall, winter and spring, a dough compounded as follows, fed one day and then intermitted two days, to produce excellent results: To three gallons of boiling water add one half an ounce of common salt, a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, and four ounces of lard. Stir the mixture until the pepper has imparted considerable of its strength to the water. Meantime the salt will have been dissolved and the lard melted. Then, while yet boiling hot, stir in a meal made of oats and corn, ground together in equal proportions, until a stiff mush is formed. Set away to cool down to a milk warmth.

Before feeding take to see that you have an over dose neither of salt or pepper, and to prevent the hens being imposed upon with a mixture not fit to be eaten. The hen must must not be more salt than to suit your own taste, nor so hot with pepper that you could not swallow it, were so much in your broth. Beware of too much salt, too much lard, and too much pepper, and beware too, where the seasoning is high, of feeding this dough too long at a time. Let the hens be fed one day fully with it, then let it be omitted and the ordinary feed given two days, and soon, and the result will be found satisfactory. Take notice—hens fed this way will be a good deal less inclined to set than when fed in an ordinary manner.

AN OLD FASHIONED FAILURE.

A good story is told of two old merchants in Essex County, Massachusetts, who once attempted to fail. They were brothers, and by honest industry had acquired a handsome independence, and were spending the evening of their days in a quiet, comfortable way, keeping a store which they both tended diligently, rather for the comfort and convenience of having a place of daily and regular resort, than for any great profit in their business. Well, being easy, good-natured sort of men, they had "just as a matter of form," put their names to a paper of a son of one of them, in business in a neighboring town. Matters went on as usual for some time after the old gentlemen had adopted this bad habit of endorsing the young man's paper. But at length this young son and nephew discovered that he could not pay his honest debts, and so informed his father and uncle. The old gentlemen sat down in their leather chairs to look over the matter and decide on what they should do. "Well," says Capt. A., "if E. has failed, I suppose we have, too, haven't we?" "Why, yes," replied Capt. E., "I don't see but what we have, and if we have failed, we must take down our sign and not pretend to be doing business in the ordinary way." These points settled, the old gentlemen proceeded to dismantle their store of its weather-stained old sign, and then sat themselves down to wait for creditors to come in and attach their goods and chattels. But to their surprise no one came near them, and they went through the forenoon as usual. At dinner-time they made their way with seriousness to their respective homes, and as Captain E. reached his fine old mansion on H— street, he looked cautiously around, expecting to see some strange faces in his apartments. But seeing none, he turns to his eldest daughter and in a solemn voice inquires: "Is there anybody here but the family, my daughter?" "Nobody, father," "Have there not been any strangers here this forenoon?" "No one, father?" "Why, yes, I have failed, my daughter; at least, I suppose I have for E. has, and I expected the sheriff here and keepers." But no sheriff came, and no creditors troubled the old men. Everybody knew that they would pay their honest debts, and meet all their engagements if it was in their power so to do; and that it was useless and senseless to resort to the usual methods of collecting debts of them. So, in spite of all the brothers could do to fall and have their property attached, nobody seemed inclined to disturb them; so they utterly failed to fail, to the great amusement of their younger neighbors in trade, some of whom, though now old themselves, continue to laugh over Captain E. & Co.'s attempt to fail.

THE NEW SLATE.

See my slate! I do it new, On I take the other, Put my little foot right too, Run on after me.

I can make pop like of single Face as on ten tell you, To and from and big O single, Only I can't spell you.

I can make a fancy pig, With his curly tail; Little eyes and snout so big, Puke in a pail.

I can make a elephant, With his trunk a hanging; An a boy, who says I can't? Will he dum a hanging?

An the snail a tannin' out, With my tum I do, Rollin' all the while about, Sparks a-dying from it.

I can draw me runnin' 'bout, Mamma's little posset, State so daisy, rubbin' out, Does not better was it.

Now, then, all I make a tree With a birdie on it? All my picture you'll see If we'll wait a minute.

Now I draw I'll make a man, Draw like Uncle Billy, See it tummin' fast ten, Mamma, ain't it jolly.

The Germans are now publishing the telegraph dispatches which they found at St. Cloud. It appears among other things that the Roman Catholic Bishop of Constantine, at Aix-les-Bains, wrote to Ollivier, Napoleon's Prime Minister, on the declaration of war against Prussia, proposing, in his ardent public prayers, and a Te Deum. The more prudent Ollivier telegraphed back: "Prayers—yes; Te Deum—no; thanks for your letter."

CORNS ON THE FEET.—The following method of removing these troublesome growths is given in "La Sante." Macerate the tender leaves of ivy in strong vinegar for eight or ten days, then apply them on the corns. This dressing should be applied twice a day, and in a few days the corns will be removed.

IMPORTANCE OF REVACINATION.—There is a case on record of a woman who was vaccinated by Jenner himself, who then resisted various inoculations, who some years after nursed her own children through smallpox with impunity, and who nevertheless, at a very advanced period of life, caught the disease from a grandchild, and died.

A VALUABLE SECRET.—The unpleasant odor produced by perspiration is frequently the source of vexation to gentlemen and ladies, some of whom are as subject to its excesses as their fellow mortals of another color. Nothing is simpler than the removal of this odor and much more effectually than by the application of such costly unguents and perfumes as are in use. It is only necessary to procure some of the compound spirits of ammonia, and place about two table-spoonsful in a basin of water. Washing the face, hands and arms with this, leaves the skin as clean, sweet and fresh as one could wish. The wash is perfectly harmless, and very cheap.

UNLIMITED CREDIT.—An enterprising and fair-dealing business man in Augusta, Maine, was lately met at the door of his grocery by an honest looking Frenchman, an entire stranger to him, who asked credit for a barrel of flour. "I can pay half cash down and the balance next Saturday sure." The merchant without hesitation turned to one of his clerks, and with a kindly smile upon the face of the owner of the barrel of flour, said: "This good man wants to get trusted, for a barrel of flour; he'll pay half down and the rest next Saturday. I'll risk him; he's good as gold; open a fresh barrel, weigh out half, deliver it in good shape at his house, put the barrel away safely, and take it down next Saturday when he pays the balance; never refuse to trust an honest-looking man for bread." It was done; the money was paid, and the French gentleman departed rejoicing in an abundance of flour and unlimited credit.

IMPORTANT INSURANCE CASE.—An insurance suit of no little importance has just been decided in Michigan. The case at issue was that of a man robbed and murdered while walking home. He had a policy in an accident insurance company, and upon this his administrator sued to recover. The court, however, ruled that traveling on foot cannot be construed to meet the conditions of the policy which prescribes recovery only when the accident is the result of traveling "by private or public conveyance." The court thereupon sustained the company in its refusal to pay its policy upon the murdered man's life. This is certainly a very strict construction of the law, so strict, indeed, as to render the present form of the policies of accident companies less valuable than they have been considered. For instance, under this decision their validity would seem to lapse the moment the insured set foot upon the ground, even in leaving one train for another, even in going from his carriage to his horse's head.
